OH, NO! It isn't Thanksgiving time ALREADY, is it? Little Karen Mello of Schulte Road shares the understandable alarm of her two tame turkeys, Timmy and Teddy, at the prospect of a forthcoming feast featuring you-know-what. If Karen has her way, the Mello family will resolve this quandary with a trip to a local supermarket. Photo by George T.C. Smith.

AFTER A FEW HUNDRED THOUSAND YEARS, the sharp outlines of one-time terraces become softened into a series of gentle mounds. This view up Arroyo Seco Canyon shows topography very similar to Carmel Valley.

Terraces reveal geologic history of Carmel Valley

By PAT GRIFFITH

When geologists think of history, they tend to go along with the Biblical observation that "a thousand years are but a day."

Thus when MPC geologist Milton Bristo leads a tour through the Salinas and Carmel Valleys, as he did recently, his comments about the geologic history of this area are laced with offhand qualifications of "give or take a few hundred thousand years."

As long as you don't let such little uncertainties trouble you, the story of how Carmel Valley was formed is a fascinating one, and relatively easy to understand.

As Bristo explains it, the Valley owes its basic configurations to two factors—the gradual uplift of the Santa Lucia Mountains and the cutting action of the Carmel River.

This process has occurred gradually during the last million years, and continues today. It may have started as recently as "tens of thousands to hundreds of thousands of years ago, if we date this relatively," says Bristo.

It started with the river, probably an offshoot of the ancestral river that once drained all of central California into the ocean near the present-day Moss Landing.

The river cut a meandering path and established flood plains along its route. Then an upward thrust of the Santa Lucias gave the river new energy, so it cut deeper again and established new flood plain terraces.

This process was repeated several times, with each uplift of the Santa Lucias giving the river new force to cut down, and level out a new terrace.

In some sections of the Valley this terracing is clearly evident. East of the Village near Los Tulares, for example, two or three distinct levels of long-ago flood plains can be seen.

The well-known mesa on William Garland's property just east of the Laureles Grade is an old terrace that was once at river level.

A similar situation exists on the way to Arroyo Seco, where terracing is pronounced in many places on both sides of the road.

"The great academic sport going up Arroyo Seco is trying to match terraces," Bristo laughs.

Reverting to somewhat understandable terms of measurement for a moment, Bristo points out that if the Santa Lucias rise at the rate of only one centimeter a year, in a period of 300,000 years—a mere moment in geologic terms —that would mean an uplift of 1,000 feet.

"The hills above Carmel Valley are mostly 1500 to 1800 feet, maybe a little more in some cases. These could have been formed by a few years of very rapid uplift, or by a longer period of very gradual movement."

Whatever the precise timing, the topography that exists now makes Carmel Valley a fascinating study for geologists.

River gravel has been found 1000 feet up the Laureles Grade, proof that the hills on the north side of the Valley were formed as the river cut deeper into the ground. Chunks of Monterey shale embedded with portions of a whale skeleton have been unearthed in upper Carmel Valley, momentos of a time 20 to 25 million years ago when this was a popular habitat for whales.

But even as the river has etched terraces to produce the terrain we now know, it has disclosed what another MPC geologist, John Kingsley, calls "some crazy mixed up geology" on the south side of the Valley.

While all rocks on the north side of the Valley are marine rocks, to the south there are both marine and non-marine rocks, indicating the area has a complex history pre-dating the time when the Carmel River began cutting through the surface.

For instance, Kingsley says, geologists have collected metamorphic rocks that date back three or four million years.

"We're pretty sure this whole area was covered by water 300,000 million years ago," Kingsley continues. "Look at Pico Blanco—it's limestone filled with marine deposits."

Geologists also have surmised that the Monterey Peninsula was once an island arc, because of the unusual way it juts out into the bay.

"We're pretty sure the land is still moving," Kingsley says. "So we might be an island again 50 million years from now."

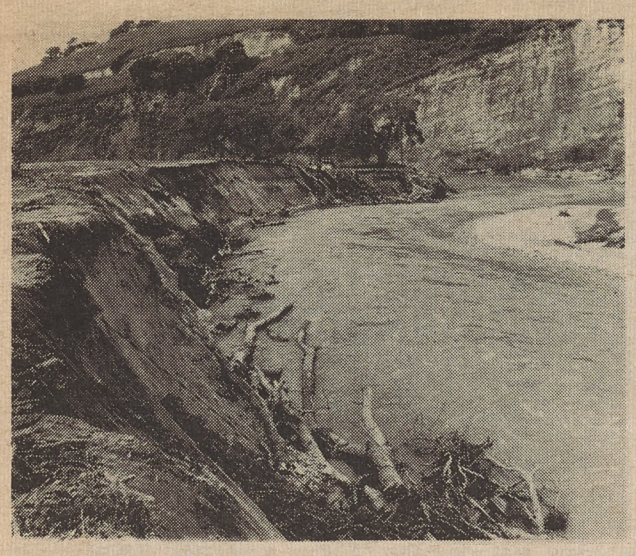
THIS HIGH MEADOW on the William Garland property opposite the Laureles Grade is a river terrace. Long ago it was at river level. As the Santa Lucias in the background pushed upward, the river cut deeper, and the one-time flood plain was slowly transformed into a plateau.

ANOTHER VIEW of terracing in Carmel Valley. In many cases roads mark the levels carved out at different times by the Carmel River.

Photos by George T.C. Smith

THOSE ARE RIVER ROCKS high up the cut-away cliff above the Farm Center in mid-Carmel Valley. The Road Department was forced to put a fence along this section to keep gravel—formed tens to hundreds of thousands of years ago by the Carmel River—from rolling onto Carmel Valley Road.

A DRAMATIC LOOK at geologic history awaits perceptive sight-seers who drive up Robinson Canyon Road. This scene on the San Carlos Ranch shows layers of horizontal sandstone rising up to a grassy meadow. In the background is an upward thrust of more sedimentary rock, indicating that at one time the land was at sea level.



THE CARMEL RIVER continues its work, slicing deeper into the earth, then pressing out to form new flood plain terraces. This picture was taken in January, 1969, when the river undermined Carmel Valley Road near Miramonte.

ARROYO SECO CANYON is a favorite haunt for geologists in this area. In the picture above, terraces that were once at river level are clearly defined on both sides. At right, an eroded hillside shows two different periods of geologic development.

THE BROAD, FLAT PLAIN at the mouth of the Carmel Valley, shown here before commercial development and subdivisions, is typical of a river flood plain. Here earlier terracing has been erased by repeated flooding, leaving only a few gentle contours on the left.

THE CARMEL VALLEY LIONS CLUB extended invitations to the numerous individuals who contributed their efforts toward the success of the Monterey Peninsula 1971 Soap Box Derby World's Gravity Grand Prix held in July at Laguna Seca. Seventy guests discovered an epicurean delight awaiting them at the Community Center -- barbecued salmon prepared by one of the Valley's best known chefs, Sam Corona -- with an assist from Dick McKenzie and Charlie Gansel. Derby director, Gary Kitt, and Race Committee chairman, Dick McKenzie, were in charge of the "thank you affair."

Among those attending were Mr. and Mrs. Dean Martin, and Mr. and Mrs. George Johnston of Santa Cruz, Mr. and Mrs. Vic Frediani and Mr. and Mrs. John Mahan of Santa Clara, and Messrs. and Mmes. John Klemett, Don Holland, Joe Ferraria, Nick Skalyo, Bill Dick, Bob Stewart, Clifford Bolgard, Roy Tilly, Jack Black,Lloyd Todd, Frank Granito, Leroy Dufur, Mike Maritgnoni, Peter Glod, Phil Wright and William Hall Jr.

Also Mmes. McKenzie, Kitt, Corona, Gansel, and William Hall, sr., Sterling Mummert, Maury Nessel, Sal Ocampo, Rich Huett and Art Fosso.

GAIL AND DALE BUCHE, members of a rather exclusive fraternity made up of individuals who have traversed the mighty Colorado on a raft, held a reunion recently for 32 fellow "River Rats" who met the river head-on last summer on a 300 hundred mile trip which began in Page, Ariz., and ended at Diamond Creek, Ariz., where they were picked up by trucks and taken to Dinosaur Caverns for the flight home. Assisting with the dinner party was Mrs. George Hinn who with her husband, Dr. Hinn of Salinas, shared the exciting nine-day experience. Invitations read, "Calling all River Rats -- Let's form a cot line (the method used to unload the rafts each night for the hot meals and camp-out on shore) to a Rat Party at Gail and Dale Buche's to reminisce and see everyone's river pictures -- you MUST wear river outfits."

Memories as vivid as their photos, movies, and slides were exchanged during the evening of visiting ancient Indian ruins, unbelievable quiet contrasting with the unleashed rapids, food, waterfalls, and the ever changing geologic wonders. Those adventuresome souls who made up the two boat loads of the Buche party included Dr. and Mrs. Ted Hooker of Monterey, Dr. and Mrs. George Hinn, Jo Anne Nissom, Mrs. Onnette Carry, Burt Risser and Gaylord Nelson all of Salinas, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Wishard and daughter Lisa, of Woodside, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Bacon, Montesereno, Dr. and Mrs. Colen McKenzie, and Howard Stoltz, Santa Cruz, Dr. Jim Laroy, Mountain View, Mr. and Mrs. William Haskins, Alta, Utah, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Diamond, Jerry Sanderson and Ken Hawkins, Page, Ariz., Dr. and Mrs. Bud Duell, Long Island, New York, Dr. John Finley, Byram, Conn., Dr. and Mrs. Henry Babcock, Belmont, Mass., Jay Holland Beal and Mrs. Betty Heath, Manchester, Mass.

Making sauerkraut the Weygers way

Even the lowly cabbage is transformed by famed Carmel Valley artist

Alex Weygers, Carmel Valley's resident Leonardo, put down his camera, his sculpting tools and his book manuscript Friday afternoon to engage in yet another creative endeavor.

Making sauerkraut.

Making sauerkraut may not be everyone's idea of self-expression. But the way Weygers goes about it, the entire process is a joyful combination of necessity and ingenuity, liberally seasoned with Weyger's philosophy of life.

As with everything that Weygers does, inventiveness and practicality are evident from the first step. Which, in this case, is getting the cabbages.

Many years ago Weygers noticed that a lot of good produce was being plowed under at the end of the harvesting season because farmers couldn't afford the time and effort to collect the scattered "Left-overs."

"Imagine, the incredible waste!" he shrieks with disbelief. "So one time, near Castroville, I stopped and introduced myself and asked the farmer if I might have some of the cabbages he was about to plow under. He was delighted!

"So every year I get free cabbages. A sackful, whatever I want!"

But -- and here's where the philosophy comes in -- Weygers doesn't just accept the cast-off cabbages and let things go at that.

He always gives something in return. One year it was a picture of one of his sculptures. Last year it was some prints of his "space convolutions."

This year it will be a curved cabbage knife, the blade tempered in Weygers' forge, the handle carved to fit a man's hand from a piece of Carmel Valley apricot wood, the heavy brass rivets from a salvage yard.

"Isn't this wonderful?" he laughs. "I make something, that really costs me nothing but my time, and give it to my friend the farmer, and he is delighted. And he has given me a lot of cabbages, which meant nothing to him, and I am delighted.

"This is an exchange of values, a barter system. The secret is always have something to give the other fellow that he really values, so that he feels he has the best of the exchange. Then you're both happy.

"That's what I tell these young people who come here all the time. They can't just take, take, take. They must have something of value to give in return!"

As for making sauerkraut, Weygers adds his distinctive touch there, too.

He shreds the cabbage and measures out one pound, using old baby scales set on the sink.

The pound of shredded cabbage goes into a 5-gallon crock on the floor and is covered with one level tablespoon of rock salt.

This process is repeated, layer after layer, until the crock is full. (He figures on one gunnysack of cabbages filling a 5-gallon crock.)

As the cabbage level nears the top, it needs to be mashed down hard to press out as much juice as possible.

Most people pound away with a heavy mallet.

Not Weygers.

He sets a large stainless steel bowl on top of the cabbage, puts a bread board on top of that, and pounds away with his posterior.

"This way I can use all my 180 pounds and my arms don't get tired," he beams, as he whacks away at the board with the seat of his pants.

When the crock is full, and every shred covered with juice, he covers the whole thing with a cloth and sets it in a cool cellar dirt floor for about four weeks.

And voila! Five gallons of sauerkraut, ready to be transferred to small jars for easier storage and safe-keeping.

Last year Weygers made 16 gallons of sauerkraut, much of which he gave away to friends.

"We find nobody is neutral about sauerkraut," his wife, Marian, laughs. "They either love it or can't stand it."

For people in the former category, she offers three suggestions for new ways to enjoy home-made sauerkraut (which tends to be crisper than the store-bought variety):

SAUERKRAUT SALAD

Combine cold sauerkraut with chopped green onions and sliced raw mushrooms. Toss with olive oil and wine vinegar.

xxx

MEATLOAF WITH SAUERKRAUT

Make a regular meatloaf recipe, using proportions of two-thirds ground beef to one-third ground pork.

Flatten out meatloaf into a rectangle on a piece of waxed paper.

Cover one-half of meatloaf with sauerkraut, fold over second half and seal sides. Put in loaf pan, pour a little white wine over it, and bake.

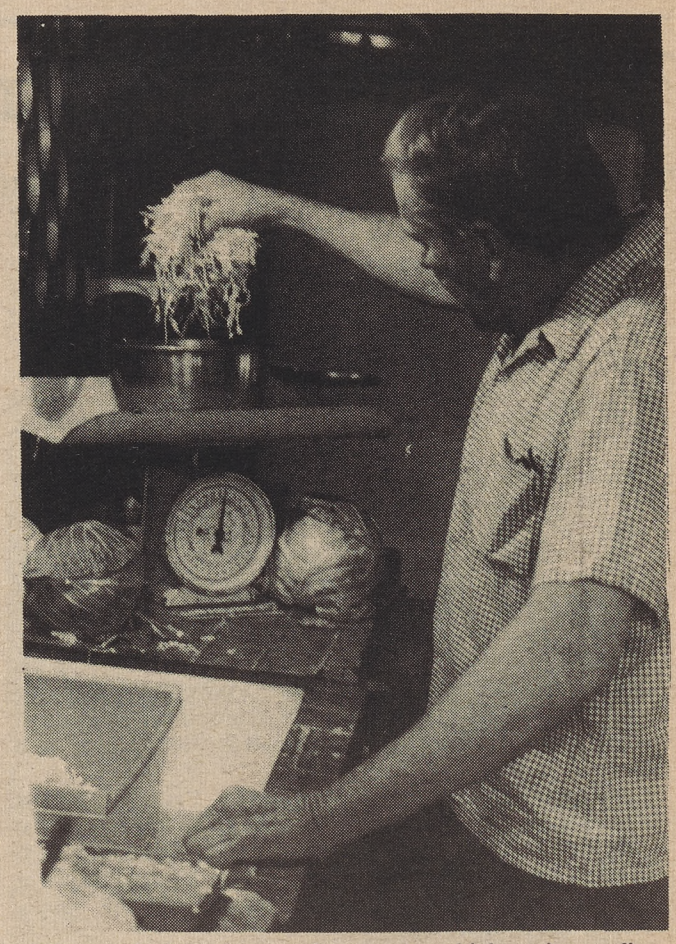
xxx

SAUERKRAUT SOUP HUNGARIAN

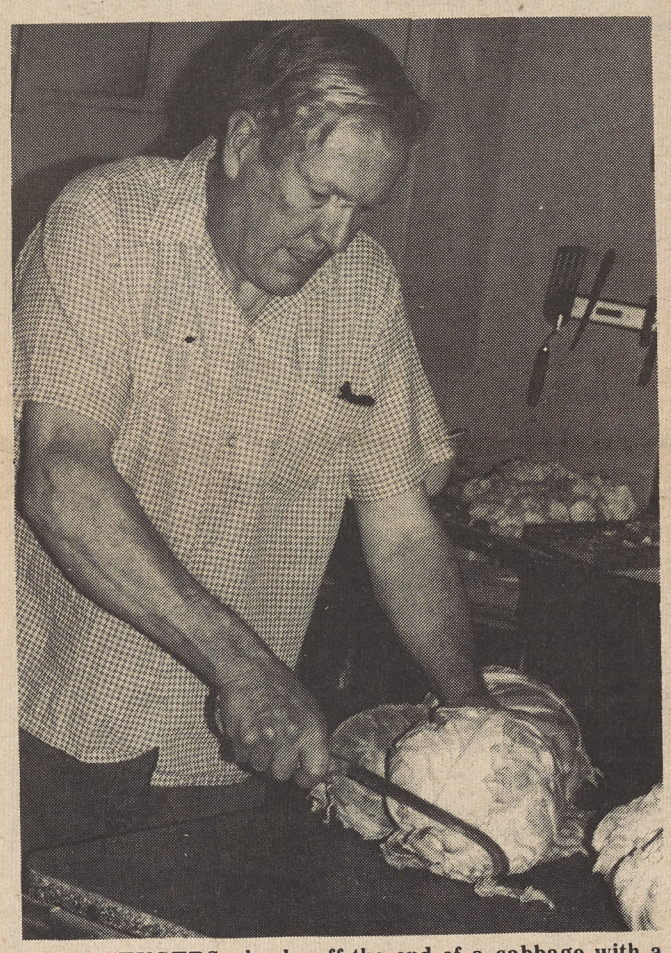
1 pound small button onions
2 ounces bacon fat
½ clove garlic
3 pints stock
¼ pint sour cream
1 teaspoon paprika
1 pound diced pork
½ pound sauerkraut
2 ounces diced ham
4 ounces sliced smoked sausage

Saute onions in bacon fat with garlic. Dust onions with the paprika, add diced pork, and stew gently under cover for 20 minutes.

Now add sauerkraut and stock, and cook until soft. Just before serving, mix in the sour cream and garnish with diced ham and sliced smoked sausages. Yield -- 8 portions.



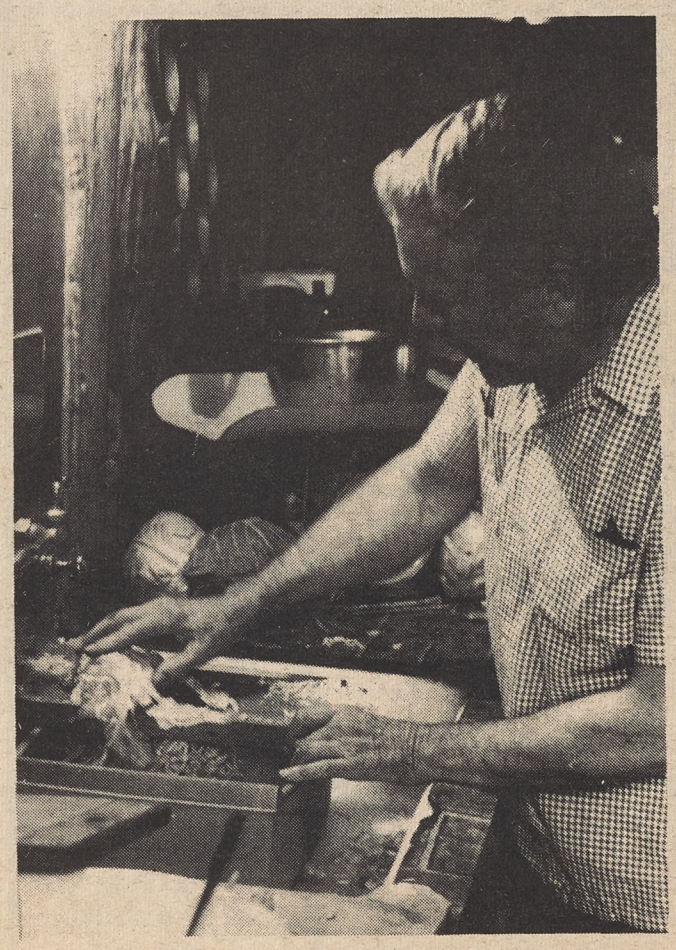
AND weighed in one-pound amounts, which go into a five-gallon crock.



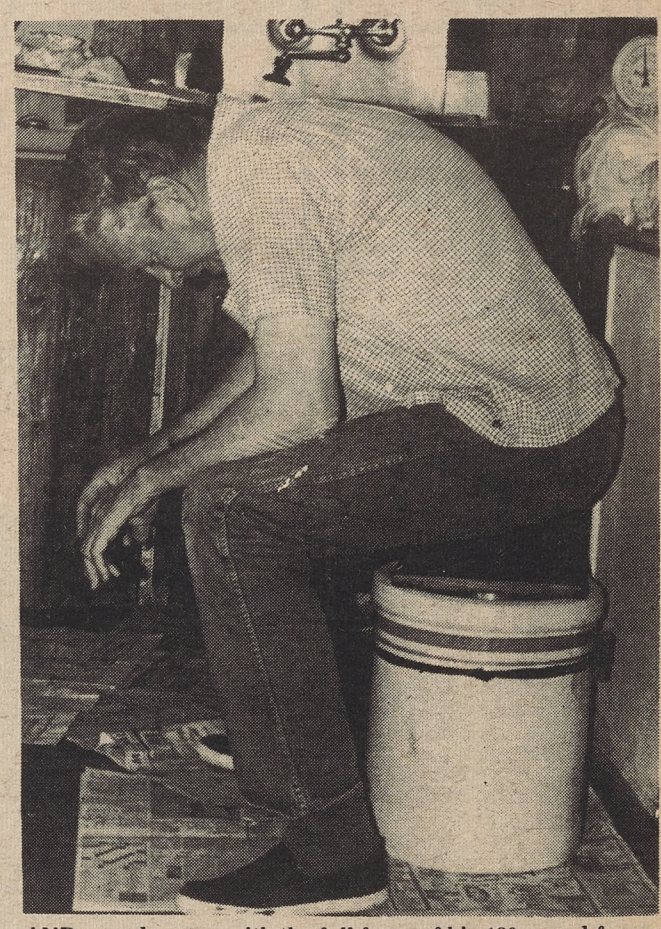
ALEX WEYGERS whacks off the end of a cabbage with a special curved knife made as a gift for a Castroville farmer.

WHEN the layers of cabbage and rock salt near the top, Weygers tops them with a bowl and board...

Photos by George T.C. Smith



NEXT the cabbage is shredded into a large container...



AND pounds away with the full force of his 180-pound frame, until the contents are covered by juice. The sauerkraut will be ready to eat in four weeks.

Mott challenges Peninsula to buy Odello land

Vows "it will be handled no differently from Pt. Lobos"

By PAT GRIFFITH

"If the people in Santa Rosa can raise $2 million to help purchase land for a park, which they are doing, certainly you can come up with $850,000 on the Monterey Peninsula to buy the western portion of the Odello ranch!"

That blunt challenge was tossed out last week by William Penn Mott, jr., State Director of Parks and Recreation. Interviewed at the close of a two-day staff meeting at the Holiday Inn in Carmel, Mott was equally emphatic on several other issues related to the potential purchase of the western 155 acres for open space.

He said he has committed $850,000 from federal Land and Water Conservation Funds administered by the state as half the purchase price for the Odello land between Highway 1 and the ocean for two main reasons:

"First, because it controls the mouth of the Carmel River, and therefore is a valuable esturine area. There are very few of these left in the state anymore.

"And secondly, because it is a valuable open space resource that ought to be preserved. If you start filling up all the open space around here, then this area will lose the environmental quality that brings people here in the first place. The Odello land is part of a complex of considerable beauty, a rich ecological area that we ought to preserve for future generations."

He reacted sharply when asked if there was any possibility that the land, if purchased by the state, would degenerate into a "hippie haven" or eventually be paved over for a parking lot.

"I get just a little tired of what some poeple say we're going to do," he answered.

"The reason for this acquisition is the preservation of this land...My staff has recommended, and I concur, that it be put into a reserve status... It will be handled no differently from Pt. Lobos. We will have the proper supervision there.

"And we would not use the Odello property as a jumping-off point for an underwater park. That's not the purpose of the acquisition.

WOULD STAY A RESERVE

"We say now that it's going to be a reserve, and 25 years from now it will be a reserve...I think people should stop these irresponsible statements about a 'hippieville.' I can't say it any stronger than I've said it."

Mott acknowledged that while it is theoretically possible that at some future date state officials might want to change the use of the land to something other than "reserve" status, this could only take place after hearings were held in Carmel.

As far as he knows, he said, no land has ever been taken out of "reserve" status once it has been so classified, and he doubts that this would ever even be considered.

"Once you get these things done, I don't think you could get it undone," he said.

Mott said that as far as camping facilities go, his department looks at things on a state-wide basis, and that no one geographic area is expected to provide all kinds of recreational facilities for all people.

Big Sur is available for overnight camping, he said, "but we don't have any other area that's as rich ecologically as this one is for preservation."

He repeated his earlier statements that if the Odello brothers want to lease back the land and continue to grow artichokes, the state would be agreeable to that idea. Otherwise, the land would be allowed to return to its natural riverbottom growth, under the protective eye of state rangers.

As far as the proposed underwater park off River Beach is concerned, Mott said that so far his department does not have enough information to know which specific areas should be protected from any use whatsoever, and which might be all right for fishing and skin-diving.

"We believe that after we've had a chance to inventory the area, there will be portions that will be made natural reserves, just as we've taken steps off Pt. Lobos and have eliminated fishing there...

"Anything detrimental to the ecology of that area will be prohibited. We're not going to make a Disneyland underwater. The basic concept is preservation and not exploitation."

OLAF votes to offer option expiring in July

The board of directors of OLAF (Odello Land Acquisition Fund) voted unanimously Friday morning to offer the Odello brothers an option payment of $50,000 toward the purchase of the western half of their artichoke ranch and to proceed with a fund-raising campaign to raise an additional $520,000 by next July.

Earlier, OLAF had sought an extension of the option for another year, but the Odellos turned down the proposal, stating that they would not extend any option beyond July, 1972.

The 155-acres on the western half of the ranch have been appraised at $1.7 million. The Odellos have agreed in principle to sell the property at that price.

Thus far, OLAF has raised some $330,000 in cash and pledges toward the $850,000 that must be raised in the community. The amount will be matched by the State, with funds derived from tidelands oil revenues earmarked for the Federal Land and Water Conservation Fund.

The option offer, to be discussed at an OLAF-Odello meeting to be called at the earliest date, could clear the way for the purchase of the property for public use. It removes the only remaining objection the Odello brothers have raised during the protracted negotiations.

William Penn Mott, State Director of Parks and Recreation said last week July is the "critical date", that the cash must be raised by then. Early this month, despite the lack of a signed contract or letter of intent, he included an $850,000 item in the budget for the next fiscal year for the state to acquire the property.

In an interview, he also said it will be December, 1972 or January, 1973, before all necessary steps are taken to actually turn the land over to the state.

When the state gets the cash, Mott said the State Parks Commission will hold hearings in Carmel on the proposed status of the acquired property. He repeated earlier statements that his department has recommended "reserve status for the land. It would revert back to natural river bottom area, he said, if the Odellos decided not to lease it back to grow artichokes.

Regarding the Odello's latest application for rezoning, Mott declared: "Why rezone something if you're not going to develop it? It doesn't make sense. If OLAF puts up its $50,000 (and the agreement is signed), we will resist any further action by the board of supervisors until this purchase is either consummated or the program fails . . .

"Between now and next July, it should be status quo on that 155 acres. They can rezone anything they want to on the east, but on the west side I think the board of supervisors should leave the zoning alone."

Mott also said it was "stupid" to contend that approval of the rezoning application would not affect the $1.7 million purchase price.

Another airport hearing coming up Dec. 14

The Board of Supervisors is expected to set Dec. 14 at 2 p.m. to hear an appeal from the decision of the Planning Commission granting Peter Delfino a use permit for two 10,000 gallon gasoline tanks and pumps at the Carmel Valley airstrip.

The hearing date will be set at Tuesday's board meeting at the request of attorney Sean Flavin, representing the Committee for Peace and Quiet.

In a letter to the supervisors, Flavin said the committee is appealing the use permit on the grounds that it expands the operation of the airstrip. Flavin also contends that the Planning Commission erred in not permitting consideration of a request by the P&Q committee that Delfino be required to fence in the airstrip as a safety measure.

EMERGENCY CALLS

The Red Cross ambulance operated by the Carmel Valley Volunteer Fire Department has been kept on the move during the past few days responding to calls for medical assistance.

Friday at 2:05 p.m. Vera L. Carlyle of Country Club Drive was taken from her car, parked on Pilot Road near Carmel Valley Road, to Community Hospital as a medical emergency.

Richard Velasguez of Fort Ord suffered back injuries and a possible fractured shoulder Saturday morning in a motorcycle accident by 41 Southbank Road. He was treated at the scene and taken to Community Hospital.

On Sunday at 8:24 a.m., the first aid crew was called to Chews Ridge, where a Toyota had plunged over an embankment, injuring four persons.

Taken to Community Hospital with multiple injuries were Mike Gray of San Jose, David Zanordi of Los Gatos, and Jay Everett of Campbell. The fourth person, Sugi Tadokora, declined treatment at the scene, but was later taken to the hospital by the California Highway Patrol.

Sunday afternoon at 2:19 p.m., the Red Cross ambulance took Mrs. Louise Carpenter of 200 West Carmel Valley Road to Community Hospital as a medical emergency.

TO THE EDITOR

I really appreciate your excellent articles on public concerns. They offer so much information in a readable style without bias or fanfare. You offer a first class newspaper.

Your article on flood plain zoning was the one to greet us on returning from a holiday in Europe. This trip was more like a revelation than a vacation. In Southern Spain we saw almond and olive orchards on steep mountains and barely accessible ravines more suited to hiking. There is very little flat land with water. They work hard on a tough soil that produces tasteless almonds.

Here we have all the fertile level land with water that we need for growing. But because it's level and easy to develop it's the first land to be paved and built up.

I would like the county to apply for flood plain zoning. And to see it used as a means of re-establishing a balance—lost since the county began taxing good farm land out of existence—where good growing land is used for growing good things and good "view" land is used for buildings and houses. The Carmel River flood plain after all grows more than passable crops—Odello artichokes go to Eastern markets that accept only the best produce in the nation, Santos Menjares always takes first prizes for a very wide variety of produce at the County Fair and Russell Wolter grows excellent organic produce.

In Italy the terrain is quite different. It's green productive everywhere. The landscape is incredibly beautiful. Later it dawned on me it's almost entirely agricultural. The many poplar forests were not wild but planted. Carmel Valley under cultivation wouldn't mean just miles of lettuce.

We haven't lived in the Valley too long—two years. But before that for seven years we used to come like tourists from Carmel Highlands looking for the sun. A large part of the trip from there to C.V. Village is probably flood plain. I'm sure it was once a beautiful transition from wildly picturesque as at Pt. Lobos to immense and pastoral as the rolling hills are above the Valley. But now it's filled with all sorts of incipient garbage, with hideous looking street lights and an increasing number of picture windows and back yards all along the road.

There are no parks in the Valley. The lawn at Mid-Valley Shopping Ctr. was nice but half of it is now covered with what we've shown we want most—more buildings and scattered rocks. That was park to many tourists. If Carmel River flood plains weren't worth so much on subdivision and industrial real estate markets they might be put to good use; to improve the quality of life in Carmel Valley. Parks, golf courses, orchards, pastures, picnic grounds, farms. All of these would improve Carmel Valley—for tourists who want something better to look at than subdivisions and for locals who want something better to live with. More building on good land is a waste.

State gives Carmel schools high ratings for 1970 tests

BY PAT GRIFFITH

Carmel school administrators are reacting cautiously to the news that students in the district scored in the top 10 percent in five of 11 statewide tests given in May, 1970.

A final report on the tests, given to the California State Board of Education last week, gave these percentile rankings to Carmel students:

First grade reading, 92; second grade reading, 94; third grade reading, 93; sixth grade reading, 86; sixth grade language, 81; sixth grade spelling, 79; sixth grade mathematics, 86; twelfth grade reading, 94; twelfth grade language, 85; twelfth grade spelling, 81; twelfth grade mathematics, 93.

On paper, at least, the numbers look "good" for Carmel schools. What they purport to show, for example, is that Carmel's 1970 first graders (who are now in the third grade) achieved a median test score higher than 91 percent of the median scores reported for the first grade by other school districts.

In fact, however, Carmel administrators are convinced that this type of rating means very little in determining the true achievement of Carmel students.

"Because of the vagaries of the testing system, you're always in trouble if the figures look good," warned James Halcomb, assistant superintendent for instruction. "The interpretation of these figures is fraught with all kinds of hazards."

Halcomb spoke from painful personal experience. This very same May 1970 test was an embarrassing one for the Carmel school district when it was discovered that the first grade reading scores from Tularcitos School were far higher than anticipated.

Superintendent of Schools Harris Taylor ordered the first graders retested in the fall of 1970, and most children showed a "substantial drop" in scores, although the group as a whole still scored in the upper 20 percent in the nation.

Further checking disclosed that the May test results for 14 children with low reading ability had not been reported, and that there was evidence of "quite a bit of stress" on the testing program at Tularcitos.

The revised test data was sent to Sacramento, and Halcomb said last week that he assumes that the 92nd percentile rating given to all the district's first graders for 1970 is based on the corrected figures.

"We asked that it be," he said.

Halcomb noted that it has been the policy of the Carmel school district for some time to de-emphasize standardized tests as an accurate measure of achievement, and that the district now gives this type of test only when it is required by the state.

Since the percentile rankings are by school district, Halcomb explained, there are a multitude of built-in inequities in trying to judge the effectiveness of a specific teaching program.

All of the first graders in Carmel schools, approximately 225 students, were ranked on the basis of a median score -- one score for the district. The same thing was true for the Los Angeles Unified School District, which reported just one median score for several thousand first graders. And the same thing for the Washington Elementary School District in Corral de Tierra, a one-teacher school with less than 10 first graders (who had a median rank of 99).

When understood in this light, and when all the local variables are added in, such as which students were absent for the test, whether or not a teacher subtly or overtly "prepared" students for the test, whether or not a school district considered it important to do well on the state tests in order to receive certain types of funding, then, Halcomb and others feel, the comparative test data released in Sacramento doesn't mean all that much.

"We would expect Carmel students to score in the upper 25 percent when compared to other school districts in the state on the state scale," Halcomb said. "We feel this is a more meaningful figure, one which allows for the vagaries of the testing system.

"If Carmel scored below this, we would be concerned and check to see if something was wrong.

"But we feel this whole concept is inappropriate for 1971. The tendency is almost inevitable to skew up the scores by teaching for the test, or providing data for the tests. In this district we've been trying to take the pressure off on this sort of thing.

"This last May we were very careful with the administration of the state tests to make sure that the same amount of emphasis, or non-emphasis, was used throughout the district.

"I do think it is regrettable that we are using such tenuous data as a basis for comparing school districts."

A statewide evaluation of the 1971 tests is not expected to be completed and released until next spring.

MAN HEARS FROM BOTH SIDES WITH 100 PERCENT DEAF EAR

HOUSTON -- Patents are pending on a revolutionary new hearing device (aid), invented and developed by a local Otological Lab.

Chief Electronics Engineer, Bob Berry, explains, "Many people HEAR well enough but have a problem with WORD SEPARATION in group conversation or where other noice is present." Now one of the causes of this may be solved.

It is not unusual for one ear to be better than the other. Mr. Berry points out that this new System will allow the "good" ear to hear equally from BOTH sides.

The process is much simpler than most "hearing aids," since it is not necessary to wear the neavier glasses or plastic "pods" over or behind the ear.

The Contralateral Routing of Signal "System" is individually engineered to fit WITHIN THE EAR. An ultra modern rejuvenation process ELIMINATES BATTERY replacement (guar. 5 years).

Distribution of this unit is through PROFESSIONAL OTOMETRIC ASSOCIATES, 35 E. Romie Lane, Salinas, 422-5087 or 507A Central Ave., Pacific Grove, 372-0912.

Navy School to present Pacific Ballet's 'Nutcracker' on Dec. 4

The Pacific Ballet will present its sparkling new production of "Nutcracker" at the Naval Postgraduate School Saturday, Dec. 4. A cast of 75 dancers, including 35 children, will bring the popular Christmas fantasy alive at 8:15 p.m. in King Hall.

Young members of the audience will be delighted by the magic, disappearing house, the Christmas tree that grows bigger and bigger, and the battle between the toy soldiers and the mice. This will be the first time that an audience will see the new sets which create the Ballet's Magic Kingdom. As a special treat, the company will invite children and parents backstage after the performance to meet the dancers.

"Nutcracker" was first performed in St. Petersburg, Russia, in 1892. The Pacific Ballet has been thrilling Northern California audiences with its production since 1965.

General admission to the ballet is $1.50. Tickets are available at the NPS recreation office, Monterey Peninsula College community services office, Abinante's in Monterey, and Carmel Music in Carmel. The production is being co-sponsored by NPS and MPC.

Sunset views:

We've been making changes at Sunset

BY FRANK RILEY, MANAGER, SUNSET CENTER

USUALLY I take this space to tell you what you can do at Sunset. This time perhaps you would like to know what we have been doing here. Things we have done to and around the buildings to make it more pleasant and more convenient for you.

First, you should be aware of a little shuffling about of some of the studios and offices. For example, the Bach Festival has established attractive new quarters in Room 11 where the staff is not only more comfortable but the organization is much more able to administer the Festival and to handle the tremendous ticket business which the annual event entails.

Then you should know that the Monterey County Symphony has also taken new quarters in Room 8 where the space is so much more satisfactory than in their former little corner and where the organization has established a lounge area for entertaining soloists and other V.I.P.'s as well as for holding board meetings.

Then Hidden Valley Music Seminars has made extensive renovations in its music office in Room 5 and is presently considering moving their new, extensive, and very active theatre department into Room 10 which will provide space as both rehearsal hall and scenery shop.

Finally, we have created a new room, known as 8A, where Julia Marlowe is creating a new community service. Here you can obtain tickets for almost any local event and also arrange for tickets for plays and athletic events in San Francisco and other out-of-town locations.

Of course you have read about the plans for the new Esperanto Coffee House which is now under construction in the former kitchen area. We have great hopes for this added service at Sunset Center and are anxiously awaiting the "grand opening" which will take place fairly soon. A place to have a moment of relaxation and a bit of food either before or after a show or other event will, we expect, be a real asset to those who come here.

Just finished by Bill Askew and his versatile staff is a new stairway and walk which will make access to the building from Mission Street a cinch. Wide, with easy risers and a secure handrail, you will be able to park on Mission and enter with no problem from now on.

Most exciting of all are our plans for the new North exhibit gallery and meeting center. The former cafeteria has already been repainted and equipped with a movie screen and other features to make it ideal for larger meetings. Next step will be to enclose the North breezeway, thus creating an exhibit gallery, and then refurbishing Rooms 3 and 4 into multi-purpose lounge, social, conference rooms for all sorts of community uses.

So you see, we are not only thinking of arranging many, many things for you to do at Sunset, we are also thinking about providing the most comfortable and convenient arrangements to accommodate you while you are participating.

If you haven't been a visitor at Sunset lately you had better stop by and look us over.

A nominating committee has come up with the following slate of 15 candidates, 10 of whom will be elected to the board of directors of the Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce: Skip Marquard, Lou Gardner, Lou Allaire, Robert Marlin, Henry Stalder, Joe Ricupero, Eileen Bulmer, Ed Marcucci, Henry Palmer, Julius Krause, Dan Carlin, Chuck Woodson, Dean Brown, Bob Wehe and Mike Rohan. Terms of those elected will begin in January.

The Pacific Grove Art Center is now showing paintings and sculpture by three Carmel artists—Jean Wilsdon, Isabel Tavernetti and Ilene Tuttle. The combined exhibit will be on display until Dec. 14.

Jean Wilsdon, a graduate of Stanford, is known for her unique constructions, in which she applies layers of illustration board cut into shapes of bright colors to make traditional figures.

Isabel Tavernetti creates sculptures that are a fusion of textures, materials and fantasy, and has won many awards for her work at the Monterey County Fair and other shows in this area.

Ilene Tuttle works in acrylics, combining bold, vivid color, solid forms and scrambled perspectives. Her current work with color relationships and shapes creates forms which appear to jut out of the canvas, making her paintings exciting and illusive visual games.

LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD -- WATERBEDS -- and PACIFIC GROVE

Once upon a time...

"Little Red Riding Hood, will you please take these cookies to your grandmother in Del Monte Woods?" asked her mother.
"What! Again!" replied Red, "past all those old wolves in Pebble Beach! No."
I want to take my cookies to the Beachcomber Inn next to the beach at 1996 Sunset Drive in Pacific Grove.
I want to swim under the stars in their very, very warm pool.
I want to ride their free bicycles along the ocean to see the phosphorescent November night surf.
I want to drink coffee, tea, and Hot Chocolate with my cookies in my room.
I want to sleep on a nice warm heated waterbed with velvet blankets.
I want...
And the next morning I want free omelette breakfasts at their Golden Egg Restaurant.
And I don't want to pay over $18.90 for the whole business for two of us.
So, Mom, call 373-4769 to make a reservation. And Mom, if you want me to stay happy always, buy me one of their waterbeds from $16.00 on up.

Today is the First of Tomorrow

Don't Put It Off

Tomorrow may be too late! Unless each of us does our part to help save the environment. At PS we've taken a small step. We've started using recycled paper in the manufacture of our envelopes. We use almost a million envelopes annually at PS, and that much paper could consume quite a number of trees each year.

If you too are interested in "taking a small step" to help save the environment, we'll help you. Write to or stop in at any of our offices and ask for our FREE pamphlet, "ECOLOGY: 39 Easy Ways to Help." It offers some solid, yet simple suggestions for saving your environment.

Let's make today the first of a lot of tomorrows.
